Ethnicity in Belgium

Group selection

As Belgium is divided “along linguistic fault-lines, and the workings of public policy reflects the divisions“ (<sup>171</sup>, 33), this coding differentiates between three distinct groups that are defined on linguistic lines: the Dutch-speakers (60 percent, <sup>172</sup>), mostly Flemish and concentrated in the northern half of the country, the French-speakers (40 percent, <sup>173</sup>), dominantly Walloon and located in the southern half of Belgium and a small group of German-speakers (1 percent, <sup>174</sup>) in the eastern cantons of Wallonia. This linguistic diversity is accommodated in a complex political system.

Power relations

The Belgian state was formed in 1830 by a Francophone elite. “The expectation at the time was that Belgium would gradually become a French-speaking state” (<sup>175</sup>, 32). However, due to the persistence of various Flemish dialects in the northern half of the country, tensions began to emerge, to a level that the growing Flemish movement started to demand the recognition of the cultural distinctiveness of Flanders. This “Flemish nationalism continued to gain strength during the interwar period and managed to win certain concessions from the Belgian state” (ibid). During the 1950s, the situation deteriorated and brought the Belgian state to a standstill. Only a complete reform of the political system appeared to be a way “out from the impasse” (ibid). Until these reforms, the French-speakers are coded as senior partner and the Dutch-speakers as junior partner. In 1970, the Belgian unitary state came to an end, after reforms that recognized the cultural duality of the state. Ever since, the two major linguistic groups have equally shared the political power on the national level, and are therefore both coded as senior partner. The German-speaking cantons in the east were granted internal rule in 1973, with their own parliament in the capital of Eupen, supervising the regional government and controlling linguistic and cultural matters. The German-speakers are therefore coded as having regional autonomy. In 1980, the Flemish and Walloon Regions obtained regional autonomy with the establishment of regional executives. The process of federalization continued over the years, leading to ever more rights for the regions.
