

Cote d'Ivoire

Ethnicity in Cote d'Ivoire

Group selection

Côte d'Ivoire consists of over 60 ethnic groups. The northwestern Mandé (Malinké, and Dioula) groups and the northeastern Voltaic (Senoufo, Lobi, Kulango and other) groups are combined into one single ethnic category of “northerners”, due to their common Muslim faith and because they have come to be seen this way by the groups from the southern half of the country. In fact, the term “Dioula” is commonly used to refer to northerners in general (¹¹⁸⁵, 197; ¹¹⁸⁶, 681; ¹¹⁸⁷, 11). The southern Mandé peoples (for example, the Yacouba and Gouro) are culturally distinct from the northern groups (¹¹⁸⁸, 197).

¹¹⁸⁵ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹¹⁸⁶ [Chappell, 1989]

¹¹⁸⁷ [Skogseth, 2006]

¹¹⁸⁸ [Bouquet, 2011]

The southeast is generally populated by Akan peoples, of which the Baule are the most important group in political terms. The country's “founding father”, Félix Houphouët-Boigny, hails from this group which has long dominated Côte d'Ivoire's political and social life. Other Akan groups are the Abbron, Agni, and the Lagoon peoples (¹¹⁸⁹, 197; ¹¹⁹⁰), which are relevant above all in their distinction to the Baule. Therefore, they are combined into one single ethnic cluster. Finally, the Kru are composed of the Bété, Dida, Guéré and other sub-groups, of which the Bété are the largest and politically most relevant.

¹¹⁸⁹ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹¹⁹⁰ [Seibel, 1987]

Group sizes:

- Baule: 20% (¹¹⁹¹). (Note that the term Baule is used, as it is common in the English-speaking literature, rather than the French term Baoulé, which is much more frequent.)
- Other Akans: The whole Akan population makes up 42% (¹¹⁹²; ¹¹⁹³) minus the number for the “Baule” group = 22% (¹¹⁹⁴).
- Kru: 11% (¹¹⁹⁵; ¹¹⁹⁶).
- Northerners: 34% (¹¹⁹⁷).
- Southern Mande: 10% (¹¹⁹⁸).

¹¹⁹¹ [Fearon, 2003]

¹¹⁹² [CIA World Factbook]

¹¹⁹³ [Toungara, 2001]

¹¹⁹⁴ [Fearon, 2003]

¹¹⁹⁵ [CIA World Factbook]

¹¹⁹⁶ [Toungara, 2001]

¹¹⁹⁷ [CIA World Factbook]

¹¹⁹⁸ [CIA World Factbook]

Power relations

1960-1993: Houphouët's rule. While building an ethnically highly inclusive regime, life-time president Houphouët-Boigny relied heavily on members of his own ethnic group to fill the key positions in the state apparatus, the state-run companies, and the security sector (¹¹⁹⁹, 690; ¹²⁰⁰, 1201, 31; ¹²⁰², 144; ¹²⁰³, 39; ¹²⁰⁴, 146, 154-6). He portrayed his Parti Démocratique de la Côte d'Ivoire (PDCI) as a pan-ethnic party, and he did indeed achieve a high degree of ethnic inclusion and trans-ethnic cooperation (¹²⁰⁵, 120, 130-2; ¹²⁰⁶, 42). Both his governments and the party leadership included most relevant ethnic groups (¹²⁰⁷, ¹²⁰⁸). The Baule are thus coded as “senior partner” in a power-sharing regime. Other Akans coded as “junior partner”.

Northerners must also be coded as “junior partner” during this period because Houphouët's ruling coalition represented above all the political-economic alliance between his Baule group and northern leaders (¹²⁰⁹, 686; ¹²¹⁰, 616, 620, 623; ¹²¹¹, 225; ¹²¹², 342-3; 1985b, 58; ¹²¹³, 24-6; ¹²¹⁴). Cocoa cultivation was largely controlled by Baule plantation owners who relied on workforce from the north and cooperated with northern transporters and traders (¹²¹⁵, 76; ¹²¹⁶, 647, 650-1). Also, the East and North (i.e. Akans and Northerners) were over-represented in the cabinet while at the same time, the inner circle of political and economic power was controlled by the Baule (¹²¹⁷).

In contrast, although there were token representatives of the group in the government and party leadership, the Kru were standing outside of this ethno-political alliance (¹²¹⁸, 57-8, 80, 83; ¹²¹⁹, 649, 654). Having overwhelmingly supported the Mouvement Socialiste Africain (MSA) – the only rival to Houphouët's PDCI – in the lead-up to the country's independence, they were sub-sequently treated with suspicion by the PDCI single-party regime (¹²²⁰, 59, 83). As a result, they were completely powerless in the face of the internal agricultural colonization of their traditional territories – including state-led land expropriations – by Baule, northerners, and immigrants from other African countries (¹²²¹, 211-3; ¹²²², 342-3; 1985b, 56-8, 69-73; ¹²²³, 85; ¹²²⁴). This inability of the western Kru groups to defend their rights at the level of the central state is interpreted here as a sign of their being mostly powerless politically, despite their formal representation within government structures. Therefore, the Kru are coded as “powerless”.

There is no evidence for the political relevance of the Southern Mande group in this first period, which is why they are coded as “irrelevant”.

¹¹⁹⁹ [Chappell, 1989]

¹²⁰⁰ [Gardinier, 1997]

¹²⁰¹ [Jakobeit, 1984]

¹²⁰² [Kanté, 1994]

¹²⁰³ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁰⁹ [Chappell, 1989]

¹²¹⁰ [Collett, 2006]

¹²¹¹ [Crook, 1997]

¹²¹² [Dozon, 1985a]

¹²¹³ [Skogseth, 2006]

¹²¹⁸ [Dozon, 1985b]

¹²¹⁹ [Woods, 2003]

¹²²⁰ [Dozon, 1985b]

¹²²¹ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹²²² [Dozon, 1985a]

1994-1999: From Bédié's coming into power until Gueï's coup.

Houphouët ruled the country until he died in December 1993 and was succeeded by Henri Konan Bédié, another Baule. After Houphouët's death, the old alliances between the different Ivoirian elite factions disintegrated rapidly – even the historical alliance between the Baule and the north (¹²²⁵, 225; ¹²²⁶, 649) – and ethnic mobilization increased significantly. At the forefront was the Front Populaire Ivoirien (FPI), a formerly illegal opposition party, founded by Laurent Gbagbo, a Bété from the southwest, during the one-party regime. Representing the interests of the Kru people, already in the 1990 multi-party elections the FPI had campaigned on a xenophobic and ethno-nationalist platform decrying Baule political dominance, the discrimination of the Kru, and the flooding of the country with foreign workers (¹²²⁷, 220-3; ¹²²⁸, 649). The PDCI under Bédié became now an instrument of Baule/Akan ethno-nationalism (¹²²⁹, 214; ¹²³⁰, ¹²³¹, ¹²³²). Moreover, in 1994, PDCI dissidents formed the Rassemblement des Républicains (RDR) in support of former prime minister Alassane Ouattara, which started out as a non-ethnic reformist party, but due to Ouattara's own northern identity and the PDCI's aggressive ethno-nationalist course, the party soon developed into the political home of the northerners (¹²³³, ¹²³⁴, ¹²³⁵). In this process, it took up the messages of an anonymous document that was published after Houphouët's death, called the “Charter of the North”, which demanded, among other things, an ending of “Baule nepotism” and the reduction of regional economic inequalities (¹²³⁶, 226). In short, in all national and local elections in the 1990s, voting patterns clearly followed ethno-regional lines (¹²³⁷, ¹²³⁸ 2001).

Meanwhile, Bédié found himself in a weak political position. He lacked Houphouët's personal charisma, and while the old trans-ethnic alliances around the former long-time ruler were falling apart, he was also confronted by new, ambitious opposition parties, and was faced to deal with a precarious economic situation. The FPI's rhetoric appealing to and instrumentalizing growing anti-foreigner and anti-northern sentiments in the south threatened to take away much of Bédié's support in these regions. Moreover, Ouattara appeared as a dangerous future rival, and in spite of the party's non-ethnic beginning, it was clear that the RDR had a great electoral potential in the north. These two factors pushed Bédié to adopt and appropriate the FPI's nationalist agenda. Together with a close circle of university intellectuals, he developed the concept of “Ivoirité” (“Ivoirianness”) which established new, “scientific” criteria for citizenship based on an Akan – or more specifically, a Baule – cultural identity (¹²³⁹, 26-30, 214; ¹²⁴⁰, 17). Hence, Bédié and his ideologues invented a new vision of who was a “true” Ivoirian – and, by implication, who was not a true Ivoirian.

In practice, the new electoral code introduced in 1994 stipulated that candidates for the Presidency and the National Assembly had to be born in the country, with both parents also being Ivoirians by birth, while foreigners were no longer allowed to vote (¹²⁴¹, 625;

¹²²⁵ [Crook, 1997]

¹²²⁶ [Woods, 2003]

¹²²⁷ [Crook, 1997]

¹²²⁸ [Woods, 2003]

¹²²⁹ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹²³⁹ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹²⁴⁰ [McGovern, 2011]

¹²⁴¹ [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁴², 33; ¹²⁴³, 649). In this way, Bédié achieved to block the political aspirations of his most dangerous rival Ouattara – whose precise national origins are somewhat unclear – by barring him from running in the 1995 presidential election. (It has repeatedly been asserted that either Ouattara's father or his mother was born in Burkina Faso.) Moreover, in a major purge of all political institutions, he replaced Ouattara loyalists from the north by Baule elites loyal to himself (¹²⁴⁴, 226; ¹²⁴⁵, 33, 41; ¹²⁴⁶, 14).

Besides the ethnic exclusion at the elite level, the concept of Ivoirité also had severe consequences for the ordinary population from the north. Because of the blurry boundaries between “original” Ivoirians from the north, second- or third-generation immigrants from northern neighboring countries and more recent immigrants, and the ethno-linguistic connections between them, northerners had increasingly become equated with foreigners. Being “Dioula”, Muslim, and RDR partisan became completely intermixed in the perception of other Ivoirians (¹²⁴⁷, 89-90). As a consequence, with the institutionalization of the concept of Ivoirité, millions of ordinary Ivoirians from the north became excluded from the “national community” and from citizenship (¹²⁴⁸, ¹²⁴⁹, 33; ¹²⁵⁰, 15; ¹²⁵¹, 652). Thus, I coded the northerners as “discriminated” during this period.

The Southern Mande in the far west faced similar discriminations as the northerners (¹²⁵², 626)). Hence, the Southern Mande are also coded as “discriminated” here.

Meanwhile, the Baule can still be seen as the “senior partner” in a power-sharing regime, with the other Akan groups as “junior partners”.

The Kru remained mostly marginalized under Bédié. Thus, they are still coded as “powerless” in this period.

2000: Gueï's military junta. In December 1999, Côte d'Ivoire underwent its first military coup. A military junta led by General Robert Gueï, a Yacouba (Southern Mande), took over state power and formed a transitory government in January 2000, which promoted the idea of national integration and included all parties (¹²⁵³, 34, 41). Yet just four months later, Gueï changed his political objectives and excluded the RDR from his second transitional government. Moreover, the new constitution introduced in July 2000 still contained the controversial electoral code. Soon after, the Supreme Court rejected Ouattara's candidacy for both presidential and legislative elections. Also, after a failed coup attempt of northern military officers, several senior officers of northern origin were dismissed (¹²⁵⁴, 16). Hence, in practice, Gueï had now adopted Bédié's exclusionary policies (¹²⁵⁵, 626; ¹²⁵⁶, 34, 41; ¹²⁵⁷, 17). In accordance with the EPR coding rules, the short period of northern inclusion is disregarded and still the group is coded as “discriminated” in this year-long period.

In contrast, the Southern Mande rose to political prominence during Gueï's short rule. Langer (2005, 40-1) shows that the group's

¹²⁴² [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁴³ [Woods, 2003]

¹²⁴⁴ [Crook, 1997]

¹²⁴⁵ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁴⁷ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹²⁴⁸ [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁴⁹ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁵⁰ [Skogseth, 2006]

¹²⁵¹ [Woods, 2003]

¹²⁵² [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁵³ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁵⁴ [Skogseth, 2006]

¹²⁵⁵ [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁵⁶ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁵⁷ [Skogseth, 2006]

relative representation in the government (and in the inner circle of power) increased dramatically in that year. At the same time, Gueï's alliance with Gbagbo also led to a much more prominent political position of the Kru group (¹²⁵⁸, 40-1). For the first time, the Kru moved closer to state power (¹²⁵⁹, 626). In general, during this time, a southern alliance developed between the Kru and the Akans/Baule directed against the northerners, the common "enemy" (¹²⁶⁰, 627; ¹²⁶¹, 652). Hence, for the year of 2000, the Southern Mande are coded as "senior partner" in a new power-sharing regime, with the Baule, other Akan groups, and the Kru as "junior partners".

¹²⁵⁸ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁵⁹ [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁶⁰ [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁶¹ [Woods, 2003]

2001-2002: Gbagbo's rule, first part. Against contrary announcements, Gueï launched his own candidacy for the October 2000 presidential election with Laurent Gbagbo, his close collaborator, as the only serious rival participating. Apparently to his own surprise, Gueï lost the elections, and when he tried to rig the vote Gbagbo's party militants chased him out of office. Gbagbo then proclaimed himself president. The RDR, having peacefully boycotted the vote, called for new elections, but without success. In large-scale street protests, its supporters clashed with the security forces and radical FPI followers. The country's crisis now over-whelmingly became perceived as a conflict between north and south (¹²⁶², 625, 627; ¹²⁶³, 641).

¹²⁶² [Collett, 2006]

¹²⁶³ [Woods, 2003]

Gbagbo continued with the politics of exclusion. The new president "put his anti-Ouattara and anti-RDR rhetoric immediately into practice. In addition to their serious under-representation and lack of influence in the national assembly, Gbagbo effectively guaranteed that the northern ethnic elites were also deprived of any executive power, thereby aggravating the already existing feelings of political exclusion and inequality" (¹²⁶⁴, 42).

¹²⁶⁴ [Langer, 2005]

Although he did form a government of national unity in August 2002, the four ministerial posts (out of 31) for the RDR were clearly too little, too late. Meanwhile, northern civilians – under the general suspicion of being foreigners – increasingly became the victims of systematic harassment by the security forces (¹²⁶⁵, 1266, 34; ¹²⁶⁷, 91; ¹²⁶⁸, 17, 23; ¹²⁶⁹, 642, 652-4). In fact, the violence against northerners became worse under Gbagbo, culminating in the infamous "Dioula hunts" (pogroms against northerners) (¹²⁷⁰, 61-72). It was only logical then that Ivoirians from the north saw themselves treated as "second class citizens in their own country" (¹²⁷¹).

¹²⁶⁵ [IRIN Africa, 2005]

¹²⁶⁶ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁶⁷ [McGovern, 2011]

¹²⁶⁸ [Skogseth, 2006]

¹²⁶⁹ [Woods, 2003]

Like all Ivoirian rulers before him, Gbagbo counted on his own ethnic group in the state apparatus and the military. Consequently, the Kru now become the leading ethnic group in Côte d'Ivoire's politics (¹²⁷², 34, 41-2). The PDCI, mainly representing the Baule group, entered into a coalition with the FPI (¹²⁷³, 29). Interestingly enough, soon after his ousting, Gueï reappeared at the head of a new political party – the UDPCI – that represented his home region (home to the Southern Mande group), entering into a renewed alliance with Gbagbo and the FPI. This alliance lasted until the assassination of the UDPCI's secretary general in Ouagadougou in ¹²⁷² [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁷³ [Skogseth, 2006]

August 2002 and Gueï's subsequent rupture with Gbagbo, just a few days before the outbreak of Côte d'Ivoire's civil war (¹²⁷⁴, 82-98, 288-9). The Southern Mande were well represented in Gbagbo's governments (¹²⁷⁵, 40).

¹²⁷⁴ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹²⁷⁵ [Langer, 2005]

Thus, this period is coded as a "southern" power-sharing regime, with the Kru as "senior partner" and the Baule, other Akans and the Southern Mande as "junior partners", whereas the northerners remain coded as "discriminated".

2003-2011: After the civil war. On September 19, 2002, rebellious soldiers from the north attacked the cities of Abidjan, Bouaké and Korhogo. The rebellion failed in Abidjan (where Gueï was killed) but was successful in the other two places resulting in the outbreak of a civil war. The rebels – the Mouvement Patriotique de la Côte d'Ivoire (MPCI) – quickly took the north and after several months of fighting, a cease-fire line was installed that effectively split the country in two halves. The MPCI, led by Guillaume Soro, a Catholic from the north, claimed to fight against the existing ethnic injustices and for equal rights for the people from the north (¹²⁷⁶, ¹²⁷⁷, 35). Later, two other rebel movements emerged in the country's west: the MPIGO and the MJP, which soon joined the MPCI in the umbrella organization Forces Nouvelles (New Forces, FN). The MPIGO claimed to represent the interests of the Yacouba people and expressed its intentions to avenge the murder of Robert Gueï (¹²⁷⁸, 113; ¹²⁷⁹).

¹²⁷⁶ [Gberie, 2004]

¹²⁷⁷ [Langer, 2005]

¹²⁷⁸ [Bouquet, 2011]

¹²⁷⁹ [UCDP, 2014]

The Linas-Marcoussis Peace agreement was signed in January 2003. (Hence, in accordance with the EPR coding rules, no separate new period is inserted for the three first weeks of January 2003.) The agreement provided for a power-sharing national reconciliation government, including a northerner (Seydou Diarra; Feb 2003-Dec 2005) as prime minister and northern rebel leader Guillaume Soro in prominent positions (although moving in and out of government). All important parties of the conflict were represented in this power-sharing regime (including the UDPCI that was a signatory to the Linas-Marcoussis Peace Accords) (¹²⁸⁰, 24) – a clear sign that all relevant ethnic groups were included. Gbagbo as president remained the most powerful political figure.

¹²⁸⁰ [Mehler, 2008]

The planned elections were postponed numerous times while the national reconciliation government was reshuffled repeatedly but remained inclusive (¹²⁸¹, 27). (For example, Diarra was replaced as prime minister by Charles Konan Banny, a Baule, in December 2005. Banny served until April 2007. Soro first became second ranking member of the government (after Banny), and in April 2007 was named new prime minister.) Therefore, the Kru are coded as "senior partner", and all other groups as "junior partners" in this period.

¹²⁸¹ [Mehler, 2008]

2012-2017: RDR rule. New presidential elections were finally held in the fall of 2010, featuring the same political figures that had dominated the country's political life in the preceding decades: Laurent Gbagbo, Alassane Ouattara, and Henri Konan Bédié. Similarly, the main parties and other political organizations were still very much organized along the same ethnic fault lines (¹²⁸²).

¹²⁸² [Mark, 2010]

When Gbagbo refused to accept his run-off defeat against Ouattara at the end of November 2010, the country slid into its second ethnic conflict, which only ended when Gbagbo was finally ousted in April 2011, and Ouattara assumed the presidency. During several months, Côte d'Ivoire had two presidents. Ouattara was the internationally recognized election winner, yet Gbagbo stubbornly held on to power. As all negotiations and international mediation came to nothing, fighting erupted again in February 2011. Ouattara's supporters moved towards Abidjan from both the north and the west. With French help, Gbagbo was arrested on April 11.

In accordance with EPR's January 1st rule, the new period starts in 2012. This period is marked by the rise to power by the people from the north. Both the ruling RDR and Ouattara's government are clearly dominated by northerners. However, the RDR is in a formal alliance with the PDCI and the UDPCI. Ouattara's first government featured Baule politician Jeannot Ahoussou-Kouadio as prime minister. Other Baule politicians, such as Charles Koffi Diby or Jean Louis Billon, have also held prominent positions. His second cabinet, appointed in November 2012, has been led by prime minister Daniel Kablan Duncan, an Agni. Likewise, Patrick Achi, another prominent Akan leader from the Attié group, has also been included. Thus, the northerners are coded as "senior partner" in this period, with the Baule, other Akans, and Southern Mande as "junior partners".

The FPI boycotted the parliamentary election held in December 2011 and has generally refused to participate in the political process after Gbagbo's ousting. Together with a certain attempt at retaliation by the RDR, this is the main reason why the Kru group has become somewhat marginalized again in Côte d'Ivoire's new political reality. They are coded as "powerless" for this most recent period.

The political situation did not change until the elections in fall 2015. The FPI continued to be weak and divided between hardliners and moderates, which kept them from participating in national politics. However, the moderate wing of the FPI showed increased willingness to participate in the political process after the party's boycott of the last elections (¹²⁸³).

¹²⁸³ [Freedom House, 2016]

Presidential elections in October 2015 were won by President Ouattara, which allowed him to act as president for a second 5-year term (¹²⁸⁴). In January 2016, as expected, the prime minister and his government resigned in order to allow for a "new dynamic" in national politics after the re-election of Ouattara (¹²⁸⁵). Ouattara, however, decided to retain Daniel Kablan Duncan, ethnic Akan, as prime minister (¹²⁸⁶). The new government, which was assigned on

¹²⁸⁴ [The Guardian, 2015]

¹²⁸⁵ [dw.com, 2016]

¹²⁸⁶ [Gouvernement de la Côte d'Ivoire, 2017]

January 12, 2016, was again multi-ethnic. Albert Mabri Toikeusse, president of the UDPCI and representing the Southern Mandé, for example, was appointed as Foreign Minister. Furthermore, several members of cabinet are PDCI representatives. However, the north-erners' RDR holds the largest share of the ministries. The FPI, which is mainly supported by followers of Gbago, who was still imprisoned in The Hague at the time, took part in the elections, but their candidate Pascal Affi N'Guessan did not stand a chance against Ouattara (¹²⁸⁷). They still constitute the opposition and no members of the FPI are represented in the government, which is why the Kru are still considered powerless. Thus, it is concluded that the power constellation did not change significantly after the elections in fall 2015 and that the coding can be extended up to 2017.

¹²⁸⁷ [Reuters, 2015]

In October 2016, the Ivorian voters accepted a constipctutional referendum proposed by the president. Amongst other things, the "Ivorianness"-rule, implying that presidential candidates need to be of pure Ivorian origin, was abolished. This strict rule on nationality had blocked Ouattara from participating in the elections several times and was responsible for the ethnic tensions that led to the civil war in the early 2000s (¹²⁸⁸). Also as a consequence of the new constitution, prime minister Daniel Kablan Duncan was appointed first Vice-President of the Ivory Coast in January 2017. Possible consequences on the power constellation between the different groups have to be assessed at a later point and would be coded from 2018 on (according to the January 1st rule).

¹²⁸⁸ [Global Security, 2017]

Bibliography

- [Bouquet, 2011] Bouquet, Christian (2011). Côte d'Ivoire: Le désespoir de Kourouma. 3rd ed. Paris: Armand Colin.
- [Chappell, 1989] Chappell, David A. (1989). The Nation as Frontier: Ethnicity and Clientelism in Ivorian History. The International Journal of African Historical Studies 22 (4):671-696.
- [CIA World Factbook] CIA World Factbook. Cote d'Ivoire - Population. Retrieved on 02.05.2017 from: <https://www.cia.gov/library/publications/the-world-factbook/geos/iv.html>
- [Collett, 2006] Collett, Moya (2006). Ivorian Identity Constructions: Ethnicity and Nationalism in the Prelude to Civil War. Nations and Nationalism 12 (4):613-629.
- [Crook, 1997] Crook, Richard C. (1997). Winning coalitions and ethno-regional politics: the failure of the opposition in the 1990 and 1995 elections in Côte d'Ivoire. African Affairs 96(383): 215-242.
- [Dozon, 1985a] Dozon, Jean-Pierre (1985a). La société bété : histoires d'une ethnie de Côte d'Ivoire. Bondy: Éditions de l'ORSTOM, Karthala.
- [Dozon, 1985b] Dozon, Jean-Pierre (1985b). Les Bété: une création coloniale. In Au coeur de l'ethnie. Ethnies, tribalisme et état en Afrique, edited by J.-L. Amselle and E. M'Bokolo. Paris: Editions la Découverte. 49-85.
- [dw.com, 2016] dw.com (2016). Ivory Coast's prime minister and government resign. Retrieved on 14.12.2017 from: <http://www.dw.com/en/ivory-coasts-prime-minister-and-government-resign/a-18963471>
- [Fearon, 2003] Fearon, James D. 2003. Ethnic and Cultural Diversity by Country. Journal of Economic Growth 8 (2):195-222.
- [Freedom House, 2016] Freedom House (2016). Freedom in the World 2016: Cote d'Ivoire. Retrieved on 14.12.2107 from: <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-world/2016/c-te-divoire>

- [Gardinier, 1997] Gardinier, David E. (1997). Gabon: Limited Reform and Regime Survival. In Political Reform in Francophone Africa, edited by J. F. Clark and D. E. Gardinier. Boulder, CO: Westview Press. 145-161.
- [Gberie, 2004] Gberie, Lansana (2004). The Crisis in Ivory Coast. Z Net. Retrieved on 17.09.2013 from: <http://www.zcommunications.org/the-crisis-in-ivory-coast-by-lansana-gberie.html>
- [Global Security, 2017] Global Security. (2017). Ivory Coast - Government. Retrieved on 14.12.2017 from: <https://www.globalsecurity.org/military/world/africa/iv-government.htm>
- [Gouvernement de la Côte d'Ivoire, 2017] Gouvernement de la Côte d'Ivoire (2017). Son Excellence Daniel Kablan Duncan. Retrieved on 14.12.2017 from: http://www.gouv.ci/doc/BIOGRAPHIE_PM_3.pdf
- [IRIN Africa, 2005] IRIN Africa (2005). Côte d'Ivoire: What's in a Name? A Fight for Identity. Retrieved on 15.2.2014 from: <http://www.irinnews.org/report.aspx?reportid=56955>
- [Jakobeit, 1984] Jakobeit, Cord (1984). Die sozio-ökonomische Entwicklung der Elfenbeinküste seit der Unabhängigkeit. Hamburg: Institut für Afrika-Kunde.
- [Kanté, 1994] Kanté, Kébé (1994). Die Problematik der politischen Macht und Herrschaft in der postkolonialen Côte d'Ivoire. Münster: Lit.
- [Langer, 2005] Langer, Arnim (2005). Horizontal Inequalities and Violent Group Mobilization in Côte d'Ivoire. Oxford Development Studies 33 (1):25-45.
- [Lemarchand, 1972] Lemarchand, Rene (1972). Political Clientelism and Ethnicity in Tropical Africa: Competing Solidarities in Nation-Building. The American Political Science Review 66 (1):68-90.
- [Mark, 2010] Mark, Monica (2010). Côte d'Ivoire: Who will be the new Moses? The Africa Report, N° 25, 33-35.
- [McGovern, 2011] McGovern, Mike (2011). Making War in Côte d'Ivoire. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
- [Mehler, 2008] Mehler, Andreas (2008). Not Always in the People's Interest: Power-sharing Arrangements in African Peace Agreements. GIGA Working Papers. Retrieved on 1.02.2014 from: http://www.giga-hamburg.de/de/system/files/publications/wp83_mehler.pdf
- [Ndombet, 2009] Ndombet, Wilson-André (2009). Partis politiques et unité nationale au Gabon. Paris: Éditions Karthala.

- [Reuters, 2015] Reuters (2015). Gbagbo's FPI picks presidential hopeful after years of boycotts. Retrieved on 14.12.2017 from: <https://www.reuters.com/article/us-ivorycoast-election/gbagbos-fpi-picks-presidential-hopeful-after-years-of-boycotts-idUSKCN0QD0QF20150808>
- [Seibel, 1987] Seibel, Hans Dieter, Séri Dédy, Sabine Herwegen, and Daniel Mianno Kadja (1987). Ländliche Entwicklung als Austauschprozess: Einheimische Sozialsysteme, staatliche Entwicklungsstrukturen und informelle Finanzinstitutionen in der Republik Elfenbeinküste. Saarbrücken: Breitenbach.
- [Skogseth, 2006] Skogseth, Geir (2006). Report: Côte d'Ivoire: Ethnicity, Ivoirité and Conflict. Landinfo - Country of Origin Information Centre. Retrieved on 31.08.2010 from: http://www.landinfo.no/asset/514/1/514_1.pdf
- [The Guardian, 2015] The Guardian (2015). Alassane Ouattara wins Ivory Coast election by a landslide. Retrieved on 14.12.2017 from: <https://www.theguardian.com/world/2015/oct/28/alassane-ouattara-wins-ivory-coast-election-by-a-landslide>
- [Toungara, 2001] Toungara, Jeanne Maddox (2001). Ethnicity and Political Crisis in Côte d'Ivoire. Journal of Democracy 12 (3):63-72.
- [UCDP, 2014] UCDP (2014). Uppsala Conflict Database. Retrieved on 11.2.2014 from: http://www.ucdp.uu.se/gpdatabase/gpcountry.php?id=40®ionSelect=2-Southern_Africa#
- [Woods, 2003] Woods, Dwayne (2003). The Tragedy of the Cocoa Pod: Rent-Seeking, Land and Ethnic Conflict in Ivory Coast. The Journal of Modern African Studies 41 (4):641-655.

Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire

From 1960 until 1993

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	0.34	JUNIOR PARTNER
Other Akans	0.22	JUNIOR PARTNER
Baule (Akan)	0.2	SENIOR PARTNER
Kru	0.11	POWERLESS
Southern Mande	0.1	IRRELEVANT

From 1994 until 1999

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	0.34	DISCRIMINATED
Other Akans	0.22	JUNIOR PARTNER
Baule (Akan)	0.2	SENIOR PARTNER
Kru	0.11	POWERLESS
Southern Mande	0.1	DISCRIMINATED

From 2000 until 2000

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	0.34	DISCRIMINATED
Other Akans	0.22	JUNIOR PARTNER
Baule (Akan)	0.2	JUNIOR PARTNER
Kru	0.11	JUNIOR PARTNER
Southern Mande	0.1	SENIOR PARTNER

Figure 233: Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 1960-1993.

Figure 234: Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 1994-1999.

Figure 235: Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 2000-2000.

From 2001 until 2002

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	0.34	DISCRIMINATED
Other Akans	0.22	JUNIOR PARTNER
Baule (Akan)	0.2	JUNIOR PARTNER
Kru	0.11	SENIOR PARTNER
Southern Mande	0.1	JUNIOR PARTNER

From 2003 until 2011

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	0.34	JUNIOR PARTNER
Other Akans	0.22	JUNIOR PARTNER
Baule (Akan)	0.2	JUNIOR PARTNER
Kru	0.11	SENIOR PARTNER
Southern Mande	0.1	JUNIOR PARTNER

From 2012 until 2017

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	0.34	SENIOR PARTNER
Other Akans	0.22	JUNIOR PARTNER
Baule (Akan)	0.2	JUNIOR PARTNER
Kru	0.11	POWERLESS
Southern Mande	0.1	JUNIOR PARTNER

Figure 236: Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 2001-2002.

Figure 237: Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 2003-2011.

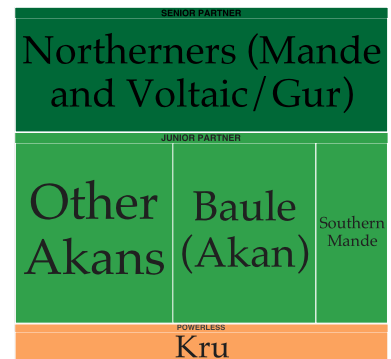

Figure 238: Political status of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 2012-2017.

Geographical coverage of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire

From 1960 until 1993

Figure 239: Map of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 1960-1993.

	Group name	Area in km ²	Type
■	Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	144 242	Regionally based
■	Kru	67 414	Regionally based
■	Other Akans	50 168	Regionally based
■	Baule (Akan)	28 824	Regionally based

Table 72: List of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 1960-1993.

From 1994 until 2017

Figure 240: Map of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 1994-2017.

Group name		Area in km ²	Type
	Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	144 242	Regionally based
	Kru	67 414	Regionally based
	Other Akans	50 168	Regionally based
	Southern Mande	30 643	Regionally based
	Baule (Akan)	28 824	Regionally based

Table 73: List of ethnic groups in Cote d'Ivoire during 1994-2017.

Conflicts in Cote d'Ivoire

Starting on 2002-09-18

Side A	Side B	Group name	Start	Claim	Recruitment	Support
Government of Ivory Coast	MPCI	Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	2002-09-18	Explicit	Yes	Yes
Government of Ivory Coast	MPIGO	Southern Mande	2002-11-27	Explicit	Yes	No
Government of Ivory Coast	MJP		2002-12-02
Government of Ivory Coast	FRCI	Northerners (Mande and Voltaic/Gur)	2004-06-06	Explicit	Yes	Yes
Government of Ivory Coast	FRCI	Southern Mande	2004-06-06	Explicit	Yes	Yes
Government of Ivory Coast	FDSI-CI		2011-03-12			