Ethnicity in Greece

Power relations

Politics in Greece are based on the image of a unified nation – the Greeks. Consequently, the existence of ethnic minorities in Greece is denied by the government. According to the US Department of State, “the government continued to place legal restrictions on the names of associations involving certain ethnic minorities“<sup>(1283)</sup> in 2009.

Due to the hostile state policy, there is no official data on ethnic minorities in Greece. In general, based on this state policy of denial, all minorities could be considered as discriminated. However, the Turk/Pomak minorities enjoy some degree of political rights due to the status as a combined Muslim minority.

Muslims / Turks, Pomaks and Others: The existence of the Muslim minority in Greece was recognized by the Treaty of Lausanne (1923). Under the treaty, “the Turkish minority of Thrace was granted a wide array of rights to ensure protection of their religion, language, culture, and equality before the law.”<sup>(1284)</sup> But due to limited possibilities to politically represent themselves as Muslims, this group is coded as powerless.

Macedonians: The existing information suggests to list the Macedonians as a discriminated group. According to the Greek Helsinki Monitor, the Macedonian minority faced severe discrimination after WWII, and parts of them lost their citizenship.<sup>(1285)</sup> “The authorities pressured many villages to stage public swearing-in ceremonies in which they pledged never to use again the Macedonian language”. Although the situation has improved, “there is [still] no education in Macedonian, not even any teaching of the Macedonian language in the public schools of villages and towns with large, if not exclusive, Macedonian population.”<sup>(1286)</sup> In 1998 the government refused to allow the registration of the group "Home of Macedonian Culture" as an association in accordance with the provisions of the civil code. The ECHR ruled against the government’s denial of the organization’s registration, however in June 2009 the Supreme Court upheld the court decision to deny the group legal registration.<sup>(1287)</sup> This state of affairs continued through 2013 <sup>(1288)</sup>. Since the existence of the Macedonians as an ethnic group is not recognized by the Greek state they are coded as discriminated here.

Roma The discrimination of the Roma in Greece is more pronounced than in some of the neighboring countries. Parts of the Roma population in Greece “are stateless, having never been provided with the most fundamental recognition of participation in society – citizenship” (<sup>1289</sup>, p. 4). Roma are denied the right to establish their camps close to urban areas (<sup>1290</sup>, 4-5). As the US Department of State notices, “the law prohibits the encampment of ‘wandering nomads’ without a permit and forces Roma to establish settlements outside inhabited areas and far from permanent housing.”(<sup>1291</sup>) Furthermore, in 2013 (<sup>1292</sup>) it is noticed that “[a]pproximately one-third of the Romani population was not registered to vote.” Thus, the Roma are coded as “discriminated”, too.
