

Ireland

Ethnicity in Ireland

Group selection

The majority of the Irish population is Roman-Catholic and a minority of 3% is Anglican. However, neither of these groups is mobilized around their ethnicity politically. "Whereas at the beginning of the twentieth century southern Protestants were a national minority with their own ethnic symbols, myth of history and political program, today they are essentially a denominational minority, distinguished from the majority mainly in terms of religious practice and belief" (²²⁶², 59). Further, in 1997, "surveys continued to convey the impression of Irish tolerance of ethnic [and religious] minorities" (ibid: 46). Irish Travellers are neither politically relevant (²²⁶³, 2264).

²²⁶² [Coakley Gallagher, 2010]

²²⁶³ [U.S. Department of State, 2015]

²²⁶⁴ [U.S. Department of State, 2016]

Bibliography

- [Coakley Gallagher, 2010] Coakley, J., & Gallagher, M. (Eds.). (2010). Politics in the Republic of Ireland. New York: Routledge.
- [U.S. Department of State, 2015] US Department of State. (2015). Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 2015. Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor. Retrieved on 30.10.17 from: <https://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/2015humanrightsreport/index.htm#wrapper>
- [U.S. Department of State, 2016] US Department of State. (2016). Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 2016. Bureau of Democracy, Human Rights and Labor. Retrieved on 13.9.17 from: <https://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/humanrightsreport/.index.htm#wrapper>

Political status of ethnic groups in Ireland

From 1946 until 2017

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Irish	1.0	IRRELEVANT

Figure 445: Political status of ethnic groups in Ireland during 1946-2017.