Ethnicity in Israel

Group selection

- Ashkenazim: Jews of European descent
- Mizrahim (or Sephardim): Jews of Middle Eastern heritage (the term Sephardim correctly only refers to the Jewish community expelled from Spain in 1492 which is part of this group) (<sup>2634</sup>, 542)
- Israeli Arabs: Arabs with full citizenship (living inside Israel's internationally recognized borders)
- Palestinians: Arabs without Israeli citizenship (living in the occupied Palestinian Territories (West Bank and Gaza))
- Russians (Jewish): More recent Jewish immigrants from the former Soviet Union

<sup>2634</sup> [Ben Shitrit, 2014]

Power relations

1948-1949 and 1950-1967

The Jewish state of Israel was founded in 1948 with an Ashkenazim-led government under prime minister David Ben-Gurion. The new state contained its sizable minority of Arabs (then roughly one-sixth of the population), who were kept under military rule in certain areas until 1966 and, in some cases, were relocated away from border zones. The Palestinians/Israeli Arabs are therefore coded as Discriminated. Mizrahi Jews immigrated in large numbers to Israel during those years, yet they were still politically irrelevant (<sup>2635</sup>).

1968-1977

Israeli Arabs are now coded as Powerless rather than Discriminated because the end of the Military Rule over the Israeli Arab population in 1966 (<sup>2636</sup>, 545) marks a new era. No more explicit but rather implicit discrimination. This change to Powerless also helps distinguish much more clearly Israeli from Palestinian Arabs. The new period is coded from 1968, relating further to events in 1967 which had far-reaching implications on the Israeli society as well. The new periode includes populations of the Golan Heights of Golan Sub-District and also East Jerusalem, which was annexed by Israel in the 1967 Six Day War (<sup>2637</sup>).

<sup>2636</sup> [Ben Shitrit, 2014]

1978-1992

In 1977, right-wing parties came into power with massive Mizrahi vote, bringing the dominance of Mapai (later called Labor Party) to an end (<sup>2638</sup>, 543). Mizrahi (or Mizrahi style) parties have always existed but two explicitly Mizrahi and more prominent parties were established in 1981 (TAMI) and 1984 (Shas). The latter entered a ruling coalition for the first time following the November 1988 elections. A representative of the group, David Levy, however, formed part of the government from 1977 on, and from 1979 to 1992 he held the important position of Minister of Housing and Construction dealing with the settler movements (<sup>2639</sup>). Russian Jews not politically relevant yet.

<sup>2638</sup> [Ben Shitrit, 2014]

1993-1996

Ashkenazim (Jewish): Senior Partner Mizrahim (Jewish): Senior Partner, because the Shas party takes key role in Rabin's government (<sup>2640</sup>, 544).) Palestinian Arabs: Discriminated Israeli Arabs: Powerless (Israeli Arab parties were counted by the Labor party as part of their anti-Likud/right-wing block. However, although these parties secured the Rabin coalition they were never included in it. Thus, it is not enough to push the group beyond the Junior Partner threshold (<sup>2641</sup>).) Russian Jews not politically relevant yet.

The first massive participation of Russian immigrants in elections took place in 1992. They helped Rabin and the left regained power. Nevertheless, immigrant parties were established only in anticipation of the 1996 elections, following which the group should be regarded as Junior Partner. From 1996 on, all governments have included ministers that are associated with one of the two main "Russian" parties (Israel-Beiteinu and Israel-Baalia) (<sup>2642</sup>, 543-544). During this period, the Israel-Baalia party was absorbed into the Likud party, while its leadership continued to hold junior ministerial positions, and therefore Israel-Beiteinu became the main "Russian" party, with its leader Liberman also holding a junior ministerial position. In January 2008, Liberman resigned from the government as his Israel-Beiteinu party left the government. Yet, members of Israel-Baalia were still important players within the Likud. Hence, the Russian Jews are coded as Junior Partner throughout the period from 1997 to 2009.

2010-2018

In March 2009, following the elections, Israel-Beiteinu joined the coalition again and Liberman became the foreign minister, assuming a leadership role in the government. Israel-Beiteinu continued to be a major coalition partner with its members holding key positions in government and parliament. Therefore, the Russian Jews are coded as Senior Partner starting from 2010. (Note that due to EPR's January-1st-rule, the period is coded as starting in 2010 because the elections took place in March 2009.)

In 2014 a legal amendment raised the electoral threshold for political parties from 2 percent to 3.25 percent of votes, “a move some civil society organizations criticized for its limitation on freedom of representation and its potential effect on parties representing the Arab minority” <sup>(2643)</sup>. Thereafter, the four Arab-majority parties represented in the Knesset united into one faction for the parliamentary elections held in March 2015, the Joint List, winning 13 seats and becoming the third-largest faction in the Knesset. However, they did not gain any executive power such as representation in the cabinet <sup>(2644)</sup>. The elections were won by Benjamin Netanyahu's Likud block and thus kept the power relations consistent.

2019-2021

In 2018, the Israeli parliament passed the Jewish nation-state law, recognizing the Jewish People as having the sole right of national self-determination and degrading the status of Arabic from an official language to a language with special status. This law de facto renders Arab Israelis second class citizens. This triggered widespread demonstrations from the Arab population in Israel and negative reactions by the international community fearing that Israel's democratic political structures will be undermined <sup>(2645)</sup>. Moreover, in the April 2019 parliamentary elections, the ruling Likud Party placed cameras in predominately Arab polling stations “in an effort to dissuade Arab voter turnout” <sup>(2646)</sup>. On the other hand, Muslim and Christian Arabs continued to be represented in the parliament <sup>(2647)</sup>. However, their political participation can be classified as tokenistic and the nation-state law clearly discriminates against the entire Arab Israeli group. Therefore, they are coded discriminated as of 2019 (1st of January rule).

No significant changes occurred with regards to the other groups listed in Israel. Russian-speaking Jews are still considered an important voting segment in elections and their votes are divided between the two right wing parties of Likud and Avigdor Liberman's Yisrael Beteinu <sup>(2648)</sup>.
