Ethnicity in Lebanon

Group selection

The politically relevant ethnic groups mainly reflect the political settlement, the Ta'if Agreement, at the end of the civil war in 1989 and also correspond to Fearon's list. Group sizes are determined on the basis of Fearon's list, the CIA World Factbook (²⁹⁵⁰) and the Fischer Weltalmanach (²⁹⁵¹): Shi'a Muslims (Arab) 32%; Sunni Muslims (Arab) 20%; Maronite Christians 16%; Druze 6%; Greek Orthodox 5%; Greek Catholics 3%; Armenian Orthodox 4%; Palestinians 10%; Armenian Catholics, Protestants, Alawites 1% each.

Power relations

1946-1970

Lebanon gained independence from France in 1943. Since then, the political situation has alternated between periods of stability, turmoil and prosperity. Political representation has always been organized into power sharing between sectarian communities. Struggles over the exact size of the shares allotted to individual communities have been a permanent source of tension, particularly in response to demographic change (²⁹⁵²). The demographic changes are taken into account with differing group sizes in the first coding period (1946-1970) from the group sizes in the subsequent coding periods (1971-2017, numbers above). Since the 1950s, the country's major political fault line has been its position vis-a-vis the Arab-Israeli conflict and its wider implications (²⁹⁵³). Traditionally, the Maronite Christians and the Sunni Muslims wielded the most influence in politics, mainly due to their large population shares as well as support by the French in the case of the Maronites. Therefore, these groups are coded Senior Partners. Other religious groups are coded Junior Partners or Powerless with regards to their respective representation in political matters in the pre-war period.

²⁹⁵³ [Bertelsmann Stiftung, 2016]

Approximately 100'000 Palestinians fled to Lebanon in 1948 because of the Arab-Israeli war, and have lived there ever since. Domestic legal discrimination against the refugees was instituted in the 1960s and refined after 1990, robbing them of basic civic rights. The main source legitimizing these restrictions is the threat of permanent settlement and naturalization of refugees. The fact that Palestinian refugees in Lebanon are campaigning for civic rights, not naturalization, is ignored (²⁹⁵⁴, 68).

²⁹⁵⁴ [Knudsen, 2009]

1971-1975

In the run-up to the Lebanese civil war, active solidarity with the Arab cause against Israel was advocated by an alliance of Muslim and nationalist/anti-imperialist forces. Christian representatives feared that such a course and the concomitant influence of neighboring countries, as well as the presence of armed groups that were predominantly Muslim, would bolster the Muslim communities at their expense (²⁹⁵⁵). The tensions between the nationalist/leftist forces that shaped the Lebanese National Movement and the Christian Kata'ib Party, which formed the Lebanese Front, were further complicated by the Palestinian resistance (²⁹⁵⁶). As a result to their political and social exclusion as described above, Palestinians are coded Discriminated in this period while the remaining groups' political status does not change.

²⁹⁵⁵ [Bertelsmann Stiftung, 2016]

²⁹⁵⁶ [Krayem, 1997]

1976-1991

This period is marked by the civil war of 1975-1990, caused by tensions between Christian groups and Muslim militias, exacerbated by pressures of rapid urban development and the presence of a large Palestinian refugee population. The conflict resulted in an estimated 120,000 fatalities (²⁹⁵⁷).

²⁹⁵⁷ [Central Intelligence Agency]

We code these years as “state collapse”, because owing to the chaotic situation during the civil war, including a lack of functioning state institutions, it is impossible to determine executive authority.

1992-2021

The Ta'if Agreement, signed on 22 October 1989 in Saudi Arabia by the Lebanese parliamentarians put an end to the Lebanese civil war and set the country on the path to peace and reconstruction. The Ta'if Agreement introduced a new system for the inclusion of all religious communities in government and administration, which is based on the fact that most Lebanese communities have been homogenized behind a unified political leadership - with the notable exception of the Christians. In practice, the agreement suggests a sectarian distribution of deputies of the parliament (²⁹⁵⁸, 240). The proportions are as follows: Shi'a Muslims (Arab): 27 of 128 seats (21%), Sunni Muslims (Arab): 27 of 128 seats (21%), Maronite Christians: 34 of 128 seats (27%), Druze: 8 of 128 seats (6%), Greek-Orthodox: 14 of 128 seats (11%), Greek-Catholic: 8 of 128 seats: 6%, Armenian Orthodox: 5 of 128 seats (4%), Armenian Catholics, Protestants, and Alawites: 5 of 128 seats (4%) combined. Further, the President is by custom a Maronite, the Prime Minister a Sunni Muslim and the Speaker of the Parliament belongs to the Shi'a Muslim group (²⁹⁵⁹). This results in the following coding:

²⁹⁵⁸ [Traboulsi, 2007]

²⁹⁵⁹ [Federal Research Division, 1989]

- Shi'a Muslims (Arab), Sunni Muslims (Arab), and Maronite Christians: According to the constitution and political tradition, these major players within the political elite wield de facto veto powers ⁽²⁹⁶⁰⁾. Therefore, they are coded Senior Partners.
- Druze, Greek-Orthodox, Greek Catholics, and Armenian Orthodox: Each of these groups plays a relevant role in Lebanese politics despite the fact that their votes are not sufficient to block policies. They are therefore coded Junior Partners.
- Armenian Catholics, Protestants, Alawites: In a largely symbolic move, they have been mentioned in the Ta'if Agreement and were assigned the remaining 4% of the parliamentary seats. These groups are coded Powerless.
- Palestinians: They were not mentioned in the Ta'if Agreement and continuously denied citizen rights until the most recent review and are therefore coded Discriminated ⁽²⁹⁶¹⁾.

No mayor changes to the power-sharing system introduced by the Ta'if Agreement occurred since the end of the civil war, despite recurring political turmoil. The popular Cedar Revolution in 2005 marked an attempt to overthrow the Syrian influenced government and finally ended Syrian military presence in the country. In the elections of 2009, the Agreement was respected and every government-recognized religion, (except Coptic Christianity, Ismailism, and Judaism,) was allocated at least one seat in parliament. Three parliamentarians representing minorities, of which two are Alawites, were elected as well. However, their political weight in the parliament is very limited ⁽²⁹⁶²⁾ so their coding remains Powerless.

²⁹⁶² [US Department of State, 2013]

In the lead up to parliamentary elections in 2013, political parties could not reach a consensus over a new electoral law to reflect demographic changes that took place over the past decades. As a result, the parliament postponed the elections, granting themselves two extensions, first in 2013 and then again in November 2014. The main reason for the dissent was that the quotas for parliamentary seats are based on outdated group size numbers in the country and some groups especially the Maronite Christians fear to lose power if the shares are revised ⁽²⁹⁶³⁾. The government was further deadlocked by the parliament's inability to elect a new president in 2014. The position remained vacant until 2016, when Michel Aoun - a Maronite as tradition requires - took office ⁽²⁹⁶⁴⁾.

²⁹⁶³ [US Department of State, 2016]

²⁹⁶⁴ [Presidency of the Republic of Lebanon, 2017]

In 2017, a long overdue electoral law was finally approved and parliamentary elections were held in May 2018. Though the balance of parliamentary power slightly shifted in the favor of the Shi'a-Christian alliance between Hezbollah, AMAL and the Free Patriotic Movement, the overall ethnic power balance remained in place. Moreover, the composition of Prime Minister Saad Hariri's government "reflects the typical power-sharing agreement between the country's dominant groups" ⁽²⁹⁶⁵⁾. In October 2019, President

²⁹⁶⁵ [Bertelsmann Stiftung, 2020]

Michel Aoun accepted the Prime Minister's resignation following almost two weeks of protests against corruption and the political elite. He had already resigned in 2017, only to return to office a couple of months later. As of the end of the year 2019, no new government had been formed and the protests were ongoing (²⁹⁶⁶).
