

Malawi

Ethnicity in Malawi

Group selection

Relevance of ethnicity in politics of Malawi is quite a complicated issue, as the scale of ethnic or tribal affiliation and coalition throughout history was very dynamic (<sup>2582</sup>). Malawi's society is divided along regional rather than ethnic lines. Yet, the comments on ethno-regionalism or super-ethnic identity by Kalipeni (<sup>2583</sup>, 152) are taken into consideration regarding access to power.

<sup>2582</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

<sup>2583</sup> [Kalipeni, 1997]

Power relations

1964-1994

Regional identities are reflected by the Chewa and Ngoni (the two dominant ethnic groups in the central region) that are the groups in power, while people in the north and south are second to them. The Ngoni in the center aligned with the Chewa, while Ngoni - as the ethnic group dispersed throughout the country and without a regional stronghold (<sup>2584</sup>, 6f) - in other regions aligned with the dominant group in the respective region (<sup>2585</sup>; <sup>2586</sup>: 26).

<sup>2584</sup> [Ferree Horowitz, 2007]

<sup>2585</sup> [Ferree Horowitz, 2007]

<sup>2586</sup> [Erdmann, 2007]

<sup>2587</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

Kaspin shows the logic of the "development" of ethnicity in Malawi (<sup>2587</sup>; 598ff): While in 1950 Tew identified 25 ethnic groups, Pike and Rimmington reduced them to nine. The "canceling" of groups from the map was due to cultural visibility (ibid.: 601). During the Banda regime this tendency continued, leading to an enhanced visibility of the Yao in the South, the Chewa in the center and the Tumbuka in the north. All the literature reviewed clearly speaks of a Chewa government under president Banda, a Chewa himself (e.g. <sup>2588</sup>; <sup>2589</sup>; <sup>2590</sup>; <sup>2591</sup>; <sup>2592</sup>). Due to the Chewa dominance or actually monopoly in government which led to privileges for the central region (not only for Chewas but also other people residing there), discriminated people in the north and, to a lesser extent, in the south aligned to form super ethnic groups (<sup>2593</sup>; <sup>2594</sup>). While most of the "disappeared" groups aligned with the dominant group of their region, the Ngoni for example did not align unanimously with one group, but along their settling with the dominant group in the region. Kaspin argues that while visible during the colonial era, after independence they lost their visibility and political relevance as a distinct ethnic group after independence (<sup>2595</sup>, 601, FN 12; <sup>2596</sup>, 7). The period from 1964 to 1994, therefore, was marked by a dualism between being Chewa or not being Chewa, or living in the central

<sup>2588</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

<sup>2589</sup> [Kalipeni, 1997]

<sup>2590</sup> [Hussein, 2009]

<sup>2591</sup> [Osei-Hwedie, 1998]

region or not (<sup>2597</sup>; 612ff; <sup>2598</sup>; <sup>2599</sup>; <sup>2600</sup>).

Yet, people in the north and people in the south did not form a united opposition to the dominance of the Chewa in the center. Therefore, and taking into consideration the development after 1994, the ethnic map is broken down into three regional blocs, representing the super-ethnic identities (<sup>2601</sup>; <sup>2602</sup>; <sup>2603</sup>).

Banda's regime was authoritarian and ethnically exclusive. Therefore, the Chewa/centraler are coded as being dominant (not holding the monopoly as there were at least pretended attempts of a more inclusive national agenda). All the other ethnic or regional groups are coded as powerless.

1995-2017

In 1994, the first democratic elections took place. In the elections, the partition of the country into three regions became obvious (<sup>2604</sup>; <sup>2605</sup>; <sup>2606</sup>; <sup>2607</sup>, autociteFerree2010). Three political parties, each representing one region, dominated the elections: Banda's MCP the center, AFORD the north and UDF the south. Bakili Muluzi's UDF won the elections, yet needed to find allies for a majority in the parliament. The period after the 1994 elections saw countless reconfigurations of the cabinet (even the increase and subsequent decrease of ministries), including northerners as well as centraler into the cabinet (the representation in terms of ethnicity is difficult to assess (<sup>2608</sup>, 64)), yet the UDF remained in power from 1994 to 2005 (until its breakup), winning elections in 1999 and 2004. The period from 1994 to 2009 was coded as one single period, as the 1999 elections brought about just some minor changes - people in the north got increasingly unsatisfied with the UDF government. This led for example the AFORD leader Chakufwa Chihana to align in the 1999 elections with his enemies of MCP and not with the UDF anymore, which on the other side led to AFORD's disintegration as not all northerners could stand an alliance with the party of the former dictator Banda (<sup>2609</sup>).

The Southerners are coded as Senior Partners and the Northerners and Centralers as Junior Partners. The 2004 presidential and parliamentary elections lead to the victory of the UDF presidential candidate Bingu wa Mutharika, while the parliamentary election was won by the MCP, leading somehow to a stalemate. The 2004 elections were, therefore, already marked by high fragmentation of the political arena, seeing new parties (and old disintegrate. e.g. AFORD) (see <sup>2610</sup>). Yet, voting was still done along regional lines (ibid.). When president Mutharika broke with his party, the UDF, in 2005, he had to look for new alliances within the parliament lacking representation there with his newly founded party DPP. Therefore, the tendency of weakened relevance of super-ethnic (ethno-regional) identity increased. This development found formal expression in the 2009 elections when president Mutharika was re-elected with a landslide victory winning support regardless of his southern descent

<sup>2601</sup> [Kalipeni, 1997]

<sup>2602</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

<sup>2603</sup> [Minority Rights Group International, 2005]

<sup>2604</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

<sup>2605</sup> [Kalipeni, 1997]

<sup>2606</sup> [Meinhardt and Patel, 2003]

<sup>2607</sup> [Ferree Horowitz, 2007]

<sup>2608</sup> [Chirwa, Patel Kanyongolo, 2004]

<sup>2610</sup> [Rakner, 2005]

even in the center and the north (<sup>2611</sup>; <sup>2612</sup>, 364-365). However, it may be too early to speak of ethnicity as irrelevant; rather a further reconfiguration of the relevance of ethnicity or ethno-regional identity might be the case. Chirambo shows how president Muthiraka had especially in his first term to re-invoke cultural symbols and practices to win support within the population. In doing this he replicated practices “invented” by former president Banda. Yet, while Banda as a Chewa referred somehow authentically to Chewa cultural practices, Muthiraka additionally to his Lowme practices invoked practices from different other tribes (Chewa, Ngoni, Tumbuka). Thereby, on the one hand he won support among the people throughout the country, while at the same time his critics could also challenge his claims to national unity due to the inauthenticity of his cultural populism (<sup>2613</sup>).

In the literature, group sizes are most often indicated according to (ethno-)linguistic patterns. In those lists for example, Chewas are not distinguished from Nyanja and Mang’anja (see e.g. <sup>2614</sup>, 601). Kaspin offers a number regarding the electorate in the respective regions with 49% in the south, 39% in the center and 14% in the north (<sup>2615</sup>, 597). The census of 2008 shows similar results with about 42% of the population in the center, 45% in the south and 13% in the north. Therefore, the sizes of the three groups are indicated as follows: Chewa/Central: 40%; Northerner: 14%; Southerner: 46%.

In May 2009 national parliamentary and presidential elections were held. Bingu wa Mutharika, a Southerner, was elected president and the DPP won an absolute majority of seats in parliament. The UDF, MCP and AFORD were still running in the elections but had to suffer losses. This indicates that ethno-political mobilization is still relevant in Malawian politics during this period. However, Chinsinga and Kayuni (<sup>2616</sup>) and Bertelsmann (<sup>2617</sup>) point out that the DPP was able to overcome regionalist politics, drawing on popular support in the entire country. Binguwa Mutharika died naturally in 2012 to be succeeded by its Vice-President Joyce Banda, who is coming from the South too. The Southerners are still Senior Partners and the two other groups are Junior Partners in the government.

The 2014 elections were the first elections in which the people of Malawi were able to vote for national parliament, president and local governments at the same time. Bingu wa Mutharika’s younger brother Peter Mutharika, also from the DPP, defeated MCP candidate Lazarus Chakwera (27.8%) and incumbent president Joyce Banda (20.2%) with 36.4% of the votes (<sup>2618</sup>). Ethno-regionality still plays a mayor role in Malawi’s political sphere. Voting in the 2014 elections was patterned after tribal lines and “ethnicity is one of the important factors that play a significant role in Malawian politics” (<sup>2619</sup>, 184f). The centre supported the MCP with nearly 3/4 of their votes and a vast majority of the votes from the southern municipalities went to the two southern-based parties the UDF and the DPP (<sup>2620</sup>). For both the south and the centre this voting behaviour

<sup>2611</sup> [Ferree and Horowitz, 2010]

<sup>2612</sup> [Hussein, 2009]

<sup>2613</sup> [Chirambo, 2009]

<sup>2614</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

<sup>2615</sup> [Kaspin, 1995]

<sup>2616</sup> [Chinsinga Kayuni, 2010]

<sup>2617</sup> [Bertelsmann Stiftung, 2008-2014]

<sup>2618</sup> [Malawi, 2015]

<sup>2619</sup> [Zeze, 2015]

<sup>2620</sup> [Malawi, 2015]

mirrors the previously noted and coded ethno-regional voting behaviour. There was no northern candidate in the presidential election in 2014, which complicates an analysis of ethno-regional voting affiliation of the northern region. The northern regions overwhelmingly voted for Joyce Banda (a southerner and former member of the UDF and DPP), who established the PP (Peoples Party) in 2011. This “chameleon” nature <sup>(2621, 84)</sup> of Joyce Banda (changing from being leader of a southern party to one that is mainly supported by the north) could be seen as an indicator of continuous decline of the importance of ethno-regionality in Malawi’s politics. However, the PP gained overwhelmingly and nearly exclusively votes from the northern region, regardless of the southern origin of the party-leader. It nearly completely replaced the AFORD, the former strong party in the north, which nearly vanished from the political landscape of Malawi <sup>(2622)</sup>. Dulani and Dionne <sup>(2623, 222)</sup>, furthermore contend that only two of the northern districts voted for a regional candidate that did not identify as a “northerner”, thus clearly indicating ethno-regional voting behaviour.

<sup>2621</sup> [Gabay, 2015]

<sup>2622</sup> [Khembo, 2004]

The ruling DPP, although seemingly overcoming regionalist mobilization, only gained minor support in the northern and central region. The Malawian cabinet is thus made up of representatives of parties that are predominantly supported by southerners since all ministers except for one (Atupele Muluzi from the UDF) are DPP members <sup>(2624)</sup>. Some of the cabinet members originate from the central or northern region but most of them are southerners. Through the major role the Southern parties play in the cabinet, the southerners are still coded as Senior Partners while the two other groups are coded as Junior Partners.

<sup>2624</sup> [State Residences Malawi , 2017]

Bibliography

- [Bertelsmann Stiftung, 2008-2014] Bertelsmann Stiftung (2008-2014). Country Reports Malawi. Retrieved from: <http://www.bti-project.org/reports/book-bti-report/>
- [Brown, 2008] Brown, Stephen. (2008). The Transition from a Personal Dictatorship: Democratization and the Legacy of the Past in Malawi. In Shadrack Wanjala Nasong'o (Ed.), The African Search for Stable Forms of Statehood: Essays in Political Criticism (pp. 187-227). Lewiston: Edwin Mellen Press.
- [Cheeseman and Ford, 2007] Cheeseman, Nicholas and Ford, Robert. (2007). Ethnicity as a political cleavage. Afrobarometer Working Paper No. 83. Cape Town: Afrobarometer.
- [Chinsinga Kayuni, 2010] Chinsinga, B. and Kayuni, H. (2010). The Contemporary Political Context in Malawi: Challenges, Opportunities and Prospects. Retrieved 30.04.2014 from: <http://community.eldis.org/.59ee456c/Political%20Context.pdf>
- [Chirambo, 2009] Chirambo, Reuben Makayiko (2009). Democracy as a Limiting Factor for Politicised Cultural Populism in Malawi. Africa Spectrum 44(2): 77-94.
- [Chirwa, 2001] Chirwa, Wiseman C. (2001). Dancing Towards Dictatorship: Political Songs and Popular Culture in Malawi. Nordic Journal of African Studies 10(1): 1-27.
- [Chirwa, Patel Kanyongolo, 2004] Chirwa, Wiseman, Patel, Nandini and Kanyongolo, Fidelis (2004). Democracy Report for Malawi. Stockholm: International IDEA.
- [Dulani, 2014] Dulani, B. and Dionne, K. Y. (2014): Presidential, parliamentary, and local government elections in Malawi, May 2014. Notes on recent elections. Electoral Studies 36(2014): 210-239.
- [Erdmann, 2007] Erdmann, Gero (2007). The Cleavage Model, Ethnicity and Voter Alignment in Africa: Conceptual and Methodological Problems Revisited. GIGA Working Paper 63. Hamburg: GIGA.

- [Ferree Horowitz, 2007] Ferree, Karen and Jeremy Horowitz (2007). Identity Voting and the Regional Census in Malawi. Afrobarometer Working Paper No. 72. Cape Town: Afrobarometer.
- [Ferree and Horowitz, 2010] Ferree, Karen and Horowitz, Jeremy (2010). Ties that bind? The rise and decline of ethno-regional partisanship in Malawi, 1994-2009. Democratization 17(3), 534-563.
- [Gabay, 2015] Gabay, C. (2015): Exploring an African civil society. London: Lexington Books.
- [Hussein, 2009] Hussein, Mustafa Kennedy (2009). Opposition politics in Malawi: hopeful signs amid the warnings. South African Journal of International Affairs, 16(3), 347-369.
- [IRIN, 2005] IRIN (2005). MALAWI: Mutharika resigns from party, reshuffles cabinet. Retrieved from: <http://www.irinnews.org/report.aspx?reportid=52936>
- [Kalipeni, 1997] Kalipeni, Ezekiel (1997). Regional Polarisation in Voting Pattern: Malawi's 1994 Elections. African Journal of Political Science, 2(1), 152-167.
- [Kaspin, 1995] Kaspin, Deborah (1995). The Politics of Ethnicity in Malawi's Democratic Transition. Journal of Modern African Studies, 33(4), 595-620.
- [Khaila and Chibwana, 2005] Khaila, Stanley and Chibwana, Catherine (2005). Ten years of democracy in Malawi: Are Malawians getting what they voted for? Afrobarometer Working Paper No. 46. Capetown: Afrobarometer.
- [Khembo, 2004] Khembo, N. (2004). Political Parties in Malawi: From factions to splits, coalitions and alliances. In: Ott, M., Immink, B., Mhango, B. and Peters-Berries, C. The Power of the Vote. Malawi's 2004 Parliamentary and Presidential Elections. Zomba: Kachere Series, 87-137.
- [Malawi, 2015] Malawi Electoral Commission (2015). Election Results. Retrieved on 31.10.2017 from: http://www.mec.org.mw/Elections/all\_results.html
- [Meinhardt and Patel, 2003] Meinhardt, Heiko and Patel, Nandini (2003). Malawi's process of democratic transition: An analysis of political developments between 1990 and 2003. Konrad Adenauer Foundation Occasional Papers. Lilongwe: Konrad Adenauer Stiftung.
- [Minority Rights Group International, 2005] Minority Rights Group International (2005). World Directory of Minorities and Indigenous Peoples. Malawi Overview. Retrieved 30.05.2010 from: <http://www.minorityrights.org/4758/malawi/malawi-overview.html>

- [Osei-Hwedie, 1998] Osei-Hwedie, Bertha (1998). The role of ethnicity in multi-party politics in Malawi and Zambia. Journal of Contemporary African Studies, 16(2), 227-247.
- [Polity IV, 2009] Polity IV (2009). Polity IV Country Report 2008: Malawi. Retrieved 27.05.2010 from: www.systemicpeace.org/polity/Malawi2008.pdf
- [Rakner, 2005] Rakner, Lise and Svasand, Lars (2005). Fissions and fusions, foes and friends: Party-system re-structuring in Malawi in the 2004 general elections. CMI Working Paper 2005: 6. Bergen: Chr. Michelsen Institute.
- [Segal, 1995] Segal, Edwin S. (1995). Gender and ethnicity in Banda's Malawi. Paper presented at the annual meeting of the American Anthropological Association (15 November 1995).
- [Smiddy and Young, 2009] Smiddy, Kimberly and Young, Daniel J. (2009). Presidential and parliamentary elections in Malawi, May 2009. Electoral Studies, 28. 642-673.
- [State Residences Malawi , 2017] State Residences Malawi (2017). Malawi Government Cabinet. Retrieved on 10.11.2017 from: <http://www.statehouse.mw/malawi-government-cabinet/>
- [Zeze, 2015] Zeze, Willie S. D. (2015). Democratic Constitution and Ethnic Organizations in Malawi: Preserving Good Culture or Promoting, Regionalism, Nepotism and Tribalism. History Research 5(3): 169-187.

Political status of ethnic groups in Malawi

From 1964 until 1994

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Southerners (Lomwe, Mang'anja, Nyanja, Yao)	0.46	POWERLESS
Chewa (Central)	0.4	DOMINANT
Northerners (Tumbuka, Tonga, Ngonde)	0.14	POWERLESS

From 1995 until 2017

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Southerners (Lomwe, Mang'anja, Nyanja, Yao)	0.46	SENIOR PARTNER
Chewa (Central)	0.4	JUNIOR PARTNER
Northerners (Tumbuka, Tonga, Ngonde)	0.14	JUNIOR PARTNER

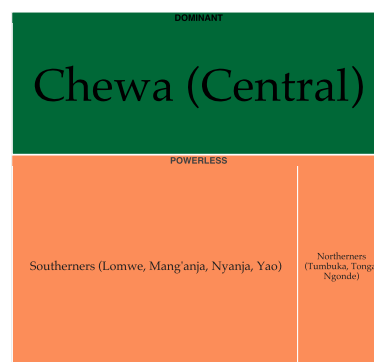

Figure 542: Political status of ethnic groups in Malawi during 1964-1994.

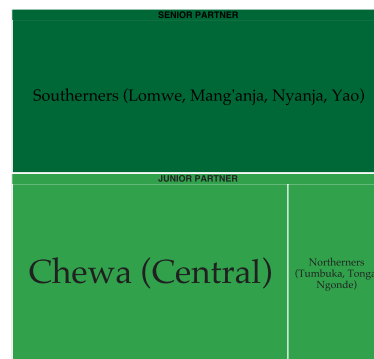

Figure 543: Political status of ethnic groups in Malawi during 1995-2017.

Geographical coverage of ethnic groups in Malawi

From 1964 until 2017

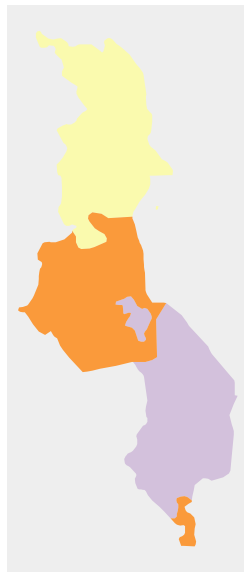

Figure 544: Map of ethnic groups in Malawi during 1964-2017.

	Group name	Area in km <sup>2</sup>	Type
■	Northernners (Tumbuka, Tonga, Ngonde)	41 003	Regionally based
■	Southernners (Lomwe, Mang'anja, Nyanja, Yao)	39 720	Regionally based
■	Chewa (Central)	38 205	Regionally based

Table 187: List of ethnic groups in Malawi during 1964-2017.