

Panama

Ethnicity in Panama

Group selection

The largest ethnic minority in Panama are the Afropanamanians. Mainly the descendants from immigrants from the West Indian islands (like the black community in Costa Rica), they constitute about 14% of the total population (³⁵⁴⁰, 285). Their situation within Panamanian society was historically. Viewed as anti-nationalist and pro-USA, as a threat to the mestizo nation, and as taking away the jobs rightfully belonging to Panamanians, they were politically and socially excluded (³⁵⁴¹, 50-1). At the same time, this discrimination led to the formation of a common identity as "Antillanos", later also "Afro-Panamanians" or "Panamanians of West Indian descent" (³⁵⁴², 51).

³⁵⁴⁰ [Foster, 2000]

³⁵⁴¹ [Priestley, 2004]

³⁵⁴² [Priestley, 2004]

Panama's largest indigenous community is the Ngobe-Bugle group. It makes up about two-thirds of the whole indigenous population (³⁵⁴³, 1), which is estimated to be about 6% of the total country population, so that the Ngobe-Bugle constitute 4% of the total population of Panama (³⁵⁴⁴, 285). Note that the Ngobe and the Bugle are actually two different groups which are, however, culturally related (³⁵⁴⁵, 1). The Kuna constitute one-fourth of the total indigenous population (³⁵⁴⁶, 1) The third politically relevant indigenous group in Panama is the Choco group (also called Embera-Wounan). Regarding their political leverage, they can be placed in between the Kuna and the Ngobe-Bugle.

³⁵⁴³ [Vakis Lindert, 2000]

³⁵⁴⁴ [Foster, 2000]

³⁵⁴⁵ [Vakis Lindert, 2000]

³⁵⁴⁶ [?]

Power relations

1946-1959

Panama is one of the most extraordinary cases of indigenous political mobilization in Latin America, as demonstrated by the political history of the Kuna, which already possessed regional autonomy status during this early period.

In 1925, the small Kuna group, living mainly on the San Blas archipelago, rebelled against state presence in what they considered their own traditional territory. Backed by the United States, they entered into peace talks with the Panamanian government and achieved partial autonomy in 1930. In 1938, the "comarca" (autonomous zone) Kuna Yala in San Blas was officially established, constituting the first successful autonomy claim of indigenous people in whole Latin America, an unparalleled achievement for any ethnic community in the region in that time (³⁵⁴⁷, 1, 4-6, 15; ³⁵⁴⁸, 31, 35-6; ³⁵⁴⁹, 47-8). Although always threatened by the Panamanian state's "appetite" for their resources, the Kuna have managed to maintain control over Kuna Yala and protect their lands from extensive foreign exploitation (³⁵⁵⁰, 48, 52, 54, 62; ³⁵⁵¹). The "comarca" is governed by a well-specified set of political institutions that are recognized in the Panamanian constitution (³⁵⁵², ³⁵⁵³, 2; ³⁵⁵⁴, ³⁵⁵⁵, 52).

Jordan (³⁵⁵⁶, 18) makes explicit comparisons between the Kuna in Panama and the Atlantic coast minorities in Nicaragua regarding the degree of autonomy actually exercised by the groups. According to his judgment, Kuna autonomy is "radically" more effective. Their example would later serve as a model for the autonomy processes of other indigenous groups in the country (³⁵⁵⁷, 1). Therefore, the Kuna are coded with "regional autonomy" during the whole time period of the dataset. (It must be mentioned that not all Kuna live on the San Blas archipelago. Nevertheless, the San Blas portion forms the majority of the Kuna (³⁵⁵⁸, 1), though over the years other Kuna communities have been granted their own "comarcas" as well.) During all periods, the Kuna are coded as possessing "regional autonomy" and powerless.

Afropanamanians are also considered "powerless" for this period and all subsequent ones. Nationalist leaders called for their repatriation and deportation, and in 1941 a new constitution was drafted excluding Antilleans from Panamanian citizenship. After a military coup in the same year, a Constituent Assembly (for which one Afropanamanian was nominated) drafted yet another new constitution in 1945/6. At this juncture, George Washington Westerman, a well-known Afropanamanian leader and owner of the "Panama Tribune", founded the National Civic League, which began to lobby for Afropanamanian citizenship rights. Also due to this lobbying, the new constitution restored (conditional) citizenship for Afropanamanians (³⁵⁵⁹, 52; ³⁵⁶⁰, 230-1). This led to a significantly greater inclusion of Afropanamanians into the clientelistic political system, "opening the door for Antillean-Panamanian political participation" and "leaving behind the period of political exclusion" (³⁵⁶¹, 52). Already in 1952, Afropanamanians became members of the Panama City Council or were elected to the national legislature. George Westerman became member of Panama's governments from 1952 to 1960 (³⁵⁶², 52, 54, 61), and in 1956 Panama's first anti-discrimination statute was passed (³⁵⁶³, 231).

³⁵⁴⁷ [Jordan, 2004]

³⁵⁴⁸ [Van Cott, 2001]

³⁵⁴⁹ [Wickstrom, 2003]

³⁵⁵⁰ [Wickstrom, 2003]

³⁵⁵¹ [Minority Rights Group International, 2005a]

³⁵⁵⁶ [Jordan, 2004]

³⁵⁵⁷ [Jordan, 2004]

³⁵⁵⁸ [Vakis Lindert, 2000]

³⁵⁵⁹ [Priestley, 2004]

³⁵⁶⁰ [Priestley Barrow, 2008]

³⁵⁶¹ [Priestley, 2004]

³⁵⁶² [Priestley, 2004]

³⁵⁶³ [Priestley Barrow, 2008]

1960-1983

A new period is introduced due to the political mobilization of hitherto inactive ethnic groups. The Ngobe-Bugle's political mobilization can be traced back to the early 1960s and the "Mama Chi" revitalization movement, a cultural movement addressing the Ngobe's relation to and status within the "outside" society. It served to construct a common identity and as a catalyzer of the group's politicization (³⁵⁶⁴, 55-6). Overall, Ngobe political mobilization has also mainly focused on claims for access to and protection of their traditional settlement territories (³⁵⁶⁵). Over the years, the Ngobe became more included in national politics. However, as a result of their traditional lifestyle, they had the least political leverage of all Panamanian indigenous groups, despite their larger size (³⁵⁶⁶, 50, 56).

³⁵⁶⁴ [Wickstrom, 2003]

³⁵⁶⁵ [Wickstrom, 2003]

³⁵⁶⁶ [Wickstrom, 2003]

The political mobilization of the Choco also started in the 1960s, when they began making claims for the recognition of their land rights (³⁵⁶⁷, 2).

³⁵⁶⁷ [Vakis Lindert, 2000]

During the 1960s, ethnic mobilization decreased, but by the mid-1970s, during the populist regime of General Omar Torrijos, several Afropanamanian political organizations emerged, such as the "Accion Reinvidicadora del Negro Panameno" (ARENEP), the "Asociación de Profesionales, Obreros y Dirigentes de Ascendencia Negra" (APODAN), and the "Congreso del Negro Panameno" that led an explicitly race-centered discourse. They were at the same time nationalists and "ethnic lobbyists", envisaging a more inclusive Panamanian nation-state that would include Blacks and indigenous peoples equally (³⁵⁶⁸, 53-4, 61; ³⁵⁶⁹, 231). After initial hostilities, these organizations were tolerated (and even encouraged) by the military regime, not least to utilize their connections to Afropanamanians living in the U.S. during the re-negotiations of the Panama Canal Treaty (³⁵⁷⁰, 55-6; ³⁵⁷¹, 231-2).

³⁵⁶⁸ [Priestley, 2004]

³⁵⁶⁹ [Priestley Barrow, 2008]

³⁵⁷⁰ [Priestley, 2004]

³⁵⁷¹ [Priestley Barrow, 2008]

Afropanamanian political mobilization continued in the 1980s, with many Afropanamanian individuals at the head of labor movements, human rights and minority rights groups (³⁵⁷²). They are coded as "powerless" throughout all periods.

³⁵⁷² [Minority Rights Group International, 2005c]

1984-1997

The government granted the Afropanamians the "comarca" Embera-Drua in 1983 (³⁵⁷³, 2), so that a new period is introduced.

³⁵⁷³ [Vakis Lindert, 2000]

1998-2017

It was not until 1997 that the Ngobe-Bugle were granted their "comarca" with regional autonomy (3574, 1; 3575, 58). Therefore, the Ngobe-Bugle are coded as "irrelevant" until 1959, as "powerless" from 1960 (about the time when they started to mobilize collectively) to 1997, and as enjoying regional autonomy from 1998 on. All other designations for indigenous peoples stay the same during this period both in terms of political inclusion and regional autonomy (3576; 3577: 4; 3578: 20). although some indigenous leaders have achieved political posts at the national level, and a few seats are reserved for them in the National Assembly (3579), indigenous groups remain mostly powerless at the national level (3580: 20).

There have been some challenges to the regional autonomy status of indigenous peoples, though not enough to change the designated coding. During this period, there were several disputes between indigenous peoples and the national government, mostly in the context of land rights in resource-rich regions where large-scale investment projects are planned or executed (3581; 3582: 19; 3583: 21). Furthermore, in April 2016, the Kuna congress decided to break relations with central government because of an alleged lack of respect for their autonomy (3584: 20). Indigenous peoples still face disproportional poverty and structural discrimination in Panama (3585: 3).

Nevertheless, according to Van Cott (3586, 33), Panama (along with Colombia) has granted the greatest degree of political autonomy to indigenous peoples in Latin America regarding the geographic extension of autonomy, its institutionalization, and access to state resources. Consequently, she places Panama in the category of Latin America's "strongly multicultural" countries (3587, 132).

Since 1999, the "black movement" has grown more united. Afropanamanian organizations have come together in an overarching, rather heterogeneous national institution called "Coordinadora Nacional de Organizaciones Negras Panamenas". Furthermore, institutions like the "Comito Panameno Contra el Racismo" and the "Afro-Panamanian Forum" were founded (3588, 227-8, 242). Yet, social and economic discrimination continues (3589). In 2004, one Afropanamanian formed part of Panama's government (3590). But still today, Afropanamanians are clearly disadvantaged in the political sphere (3591, 64). Moreover, unlike Panama's indigenous peoples, Afropanamanians do not enjoy any collective rights (such as regional autonomy) as a group (3592, 298). Nevertheless, as outlined above, since the 1946 constitution, there has always been political participation by and a certain political inclusion of Afropanamanians. Therefore, the Afropanamanians were coded as politically relevant (according to the EPR definition) and "powerless" throughout the entire time period of the dataset, as they still lack significant influence on decision-making either at the national or regional level (3593: 19-20; 3594: 11).

3574 [Vakis Lindert, 2000]

3575 [Wickstrom, 2003]

3576 [Freedom House, 201]

3577 [UNHRC, 2014]

3578 [USDS, 2016]

3581 [Freedom House, 2017]

3582 [UNHRC, 2014]

3583 [USDS, 2016]

3584 [USDS, 2016]

3585 [BTI, 2016]

3586 [Van Cott, 2001]

3587 [Van Cott, 2007]

3588 [Priestley Barrow, 2008]

3589 [Priestley Barrow, 2008]

3590 [Minority Rights Group International, 2005b]

3591 [Priestley, 2004]

3592 [Hooker, 2005]

Bibliography

- [Foster, 2000] Foster, Lynn V. (2000). A Brief History of Central America. New York: Facts on File.
- [Hooker, 2005] Hooker, Juliet. (2005). Indigenous Inclusion/Black Exclusion: Race, Ethnicity and Multicultural Citizenship in Latin America. Journal of Latin American Studies, 37(2), 285-310.
- [Jordan, 2004] Jordan, Osvaldo. (2004). When the Ethnic Collides with the National: The Politicization of Ethnicity in the Territorial Struggles of the Kunas and the Miskitus of Panama and Nicaragua. Paper prepared for the XXV International Congress of the Latin American Studies Association, Las Vegas, NV, October 6-8.
- [Minority Rights Group International, 2005a] Minority Rights Group International. (2005a). World Directory of Minorities and Indigenous Peoples: Kuna. London: Minority Rights Group International. Retrieved on 5.2.2014 from: <http://www.minorityrights.org/4215/panama/kuna.html>
- [Minority Rights Group International, 2005b] Minority Rights Group International. (2005b). World Directory of Minorities and Indigenous Peoples: Panama Overview. London: Minority Rights Group International. Retrieved on 5.2.2014 from: <http://www.minorityrights.org/4214/panama/panama-overview.html>
- [Minority Rights Group International, 2005c] Minority Rights Group International. (2005c). World Directory of Minorities and Indigenous Peoples: Afro-Panamanians. London: Minority Rights Group International. Retrieved on 5.2.2014 from: <http://www.minorityrights.org/4210/panama/afropanamanians.html>
- [Priestley, 2004] Priestley, George. (2004). Antillean-Panamanians or Afro-Panamanians?: Political Participation and the Politics of Identity during the Carter-Torrijos Treaty Negotiations. Transforming Anthropology, 12(1&2), 50-67.
- [Priestley Barrow, 2008] Priestley, George & Barrow, Alberto. (2008). The Black Movement in Panama: A Historical and Political Interpretation, 1994-2004. Souls, 10(3), 227-255.

- [Vakis Lindert, 2000] Vakis, Renos Lindert, Kathy. (2000). Poverty in Indigenous Populations in Panama: A Study Using LSMS Data. LCSHD Paper Series (55). Retrieved on 5.2.2014 from: <http://documents.worldbank.org/curated/en/2000/01/693028/poverty-indigenous-populations-panama-study-using-lsms-data>
- [Van Cott, 2001] Van Cott, Donna Lee. (2001). Explaining Ethnic Autonomy Regimes in Latin America. Studies in Comparative International Development, 35(4), 30-58.
- [Van Cott, 2007] Van Cott, Donna Lee. (2007). Latin America's Indigenous Peoples. Journal of Democracy, 18(4), 127-141.
- [Wickstrom, 2003] Wickstrom, Stefanie. (2003). The Politics of Development in Indigenous Panama. Latin American Perspectives, 30(4), 43-68.
- [Freedom House, 201] Freedom House. (2016). Freedom in the World 2016 - Panama. Retrieved on 2.8.2017 from: <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-world/2016/panama>
- [USDS, 2016] United States Department of State (USDS). (2017). 2016 Country Reports on Human Rights Practices - Panama. Retrieved on 2.8.2017 from: <http://www.state.gov/j/drl/rls/hrrpt/humanrightsreport/index.htm?year=2016&dliid=265604>
- [UNHRC, 2014] UN Human Rights Council. (2014). Report of the Special Rapporteur on the rights of indigenous peoples, Addendum : The status of indigenous peoples' rights in Panama, 3 July 2014. Retrieved on 2.8.2017 from: <http://www.refworld.org/docid/53eb3aab4.html>
- [Freedom House, 2017] Freedom House. (2017). Freedom in the World 2017 - Panama. Retrieved on 2.8.2017 from: <https://freedomhouse.org/report/freedom-world/2017/panama>
- [BTI, 2016] Bertelsmann Stiftung. (2016). Panama Country Report. Retrieved on 2.8.2017 from: http://www.bti-project.org/fileadmin/files/BTI/Downloads/Reports/2016/pdf/BTI_2016_Panama.pdf

Political status of ethnic groups in Panama

From 1946 until 1959

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Whites/mestizos	0.8	MONOPOLY
Afropanamanians	0.14	POWERLESS
Ngobe-Bugle	0.04	IRRELEVANT
Kuna	0.015	POWERLESS
Choco (Embera-Wounan)	0.003	IRRELEVANT

From 1960 until 1983

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Whites/mestizos	0.8	MONOPOLY
Afropanamanians	0.14	POWERLESS
Ngobe-Bugle	0.04	POWERLESS
Kuna	0.015	POWERLESS
Choco (Embera-Wounan)	0.003	POWERLESS

From 1984 until 1997

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Whites/mestizos	0.8	MONOPOLY
Afropanamanians	0.14	POWERLESS
Ngobe-Bugle	0.04	POWERLESS
Kuna	0.015	POWERLESS
Choco (Embera-Wounan)	0.003	POWERLESS

Figure 695: Political status of ethnic groups in Panama during 1946-1959.

Figure 696: Political status of ethnic groups in Panama during 1960-1983.

Figure 697: Political status of ethnic groups in Panama during 1984-1997.

From 1998 until 2017

Group name	Proportional size	Political status
Whites/mestizos	0.8	DOMINANT
Afropanamanians	0.14	POWERLESS
Ngobe-Bugle	0.04	POWERLESS
Kuna	0.015	POWERLESS
Choco (Embera-Wounan)	0.003	POWERLESS

Figure 698: Political status of ethnic groups in Panama during 1998-2017.

Geographical coverage of ethnic groups in Panama

From 1946 until 1959

Figure 699: Map of ethnic groups in Panama during 1946-1959.

Group name	Area in km ²	Type
Whites/mestizos	74 095	Statewide
Kuna	2906	Regionally based
Afropanamanians	1517	Regional & urban

Table 240: List of ethnic groups in Panama during 1946-1959.

From 1960 until 2017

Figure 700: Map of ethnic groups in Panama during 1960-2017.

	Group name	Area in km ²	Type
■	Whites/mestizos	74 095	Statewide
■	Ngobe-Bugle	6826	Regionally based
■	Choco (Embera-Wounan)	3412	Regionally based
■	Kuna	2906	Regionally based
■	Afropanamanians	1517	Regional & urban

Table 241: List of ethnic groups in Panama during 1960-2017.

Conflicts in Panama

Starting on 1989-10-02

Side A	Side B	Group name	Start	Claim	Recruitment	Support
Government of Panama	Military faction (forces of Moisés Giroldi)	Whites/mestizos	1989-10-02	No	Yes, from EGIP	No

Starting on 1989-12-15

Side A	Side B	Group name	Start	Claim	Recruitment	Support
Government of Panama	Government of United States of America		1989-12-15			