Ethnicity in Ukraine

Group selection

The Ukrainians constitute 77.8% of the population. The largest minority are the Russians (17.3%). The proportion of ethnic Russians and Russian speaking Ukrainians declines from East to West, the Russians are thus regionally concentrated in Eastern Ukraine and on Crimea (⁴⁶²⁴, 527).

⁴⁶²⁴ [Bos, 2010]

Other politically organized minorities are the Hungarians, the Romanians and Moldovans in the in the Zakarpattia and Chernivtsi regions and in Odessa, the Rusyns who also live in the Zakarpattia region, and the Crimean Tatars.

The Bulgarian and Polish minorities are also locally concentrated but politically irrelevant and thus not listed in this dataset (⁴⁶²⁵). There also is a Belarusian minority in Ukraine (0.6%), but they are not politically organized. Most Belarusians in Ukraine are assimilated and speak Russian or Ukrainian, such as former president Viktor Yanukovich who is said to be of Belarusian origin.

⁴⁶²⁵ [Kulyk, 2002]

Since the annexation of Crimea in 2014, the population of Crimea is excluded from Ukraine. Following this, the relative group size has been adjusted and the Crimean Tatars have been removed from the Ukrainian census. Since 2015, the Ukrainians constitute therefore 80.6% of the population. Additionally, Russians, the largest minority, have decreased in relative population size from 17.3% to 14.8% (⁴⁶²⁶, ⁴⁶²⁷).

Power relations

1991-2014

Since Ukrainian independence, the Ukrainians rule in a power-sharing regime as senior partners together with the junior partner Russians. The Russians are considered junior partners because the ruling Party of Regions ideologically defends and upholds the rights of ethnic Russians and speakers of Russian language in Ukraine (⁴⁶²⁸). Several ethnic Russians served as ministers since independence.

⁴⁶²⁸ [Party of Regions Ukraine, 2009]

An important political issue is the language: According to the constitution, Ukrainian is the only official state language. Organizations and political parties in the Russian speaking community have complained that the increased use of Ukrainian in schools, the media, and the courts is a disadvantage (⁴⁶²⁹). In Ukraine, not only the ethnic Russians speak Russian, but also the ethnic Ukrainians living in East and South Ukraine as well as in the capital Kiev prefer Russian as their first language. Indeed, there is a polarization between Ukrainian speakers and Russian speakers, which is mirrored in the voting behavior and a cleavage between the center (Ukrainian) and the regions (Russian). However, since this polarization between East and West Ukraine is rather a center-periphery issue and because several ethnic groups speak Russian (Ukrainians, Russians, Moldovans), the coding does not distinguish between Ukrainian speakers and Russian speakers but between ethnic Ukrainians and ethnic Russians. This distinction is supported by the fact that people in Ukraine, especially Ukrainian speakers, handle the language issue pragmatic and switch between Ukrainian and Russian language according to their conversational partners.

⁴⁶²⁹ [U.S. State Department, 2006-2009]

The Hungarian minority is largely concentrated in the Zakarpattia region. A treaty between Ukraine and Hungary provides the preservation of their ethnic, cultural, linguistic, and religious identities, what makes them politically relevant in national politics. But the Hungarian minority has no political power.

The Tatars are discriminated: Crimean Tatar minorities have complained about discrimination by the ethnic Russian majority in Crimea and the independent city of Sevastopol and called for the Ukrainian and Crimean Tatar languages to be given a status equal to Russian in Crimea. Crimean Tatars asserted that discrimination by Crimean local officials deprived them of equal opportunities for employment in local administrations, and that propaganda campaigns, particularly by pro Russian groups, promoted hostility towards them among other inhabitants ⁽⁴⁶³⁰⁾.

⁴⁶³⁰ [U.S. State Department, 2006-2009]

The Romanians and Moldovans are coded as one combined ethnic minority, although in the Ukrainian census these two groups are listed separately, because the division is historically arbitrary. Also, in Ukrainian census the people are more or less arbitrarily allocated to the categories, mostly based on where they live (e.g. in the Zakarpattia and Chernivtsi regions there are Romanians, and in Odessa mostly Moldovans). In these three regions, there are schools teaching Romanian as a primary language, along with newspapers, TV, and radio broadcasting in Romanian. Ethnic Romanians are represented at the local councils of a number of Ukrainian districts. On the national political level, however, the Romanians/Moldovans are powerless ⁽⁴⁶³¹⁾.

⁴⁶³¹ [Immigration and Refugee Board of Canada, 2004]

The status of Rusyns (Carpatho-Rusyns) is controversial. “Since the 1990s, Slovakia, Poland, Hungary, Romania, Serbia, Croatia, and the Czech Republic have recognized Rusyns as a distinct national minority eligible for state support for educational and cultural activity” ⁽⁴⁶³²⁾. In Ukraine, their status is not recognized, but “the regional assembly in the Transcarpathian oblast (Zakarpattia) recognized Rusyns as a distinct nationality, and the central government in Ukraine adopted a law (August 2012) that lists Rusyn (rusynska) as one of the country’ regional languages” ⁽⁴⁶³³⁾. There is an organization called “Sojm Podkarpatskih rusinov”, which demands regional autonomy. The organization and their leader Dimitry Sydor are being accused of being subsidized by Russia (⁴⁶³⁴). Whether these claims are true or not, this situation gives them political relevance. The Rusyns have no regional autonomy and are powerless. Since Ukraine does not recognize this ethnicity, finding reliable population figures is difficult (but see ⁴⁶³⁵).

⁴⁶³³ [Magocsi, 2017]

⁴⁶³⁴ [Gvat, 2011]

⁴⁶³⁵ [Magocsi, 2017]

2015-2017

Since the turbulent events in Ukraine starting in November 2013 with the Euromaidan movement, the Russians lost their status as junior partners - there are almost no Russian government members anymore (and if yes, they are pro-European) and the former ruling Party of Regions has lost its significance and was replaced by the Opposition Bloc (⁴⁶³⁶). Hence, the status of Ukrainians has changed to dominant.

⁴⁶³⁶ [Kuzio, 2015]

The Russians are self-exclusionist. The eastern parts of Ukraine, the Donbass area (Donetsk and Luhansk), and Crimea are de jure still a part of Ukraine, but de facto controlled by Russia. While the referenda were strongly criticized, a large part of ethnic Russians are living in those territories beyond Ukrainian governmental influence (⁴⁶³⁷, ⁴⁶³⁸). Thus, self-exclusion reflects the status quo most accurately (⁴⁶³⁹).

⁴⁶³⁷ [BBC, 2014]

⁴⁶³⁸ [BBC, 2015]

⁴⁶³⁹ [Chossudovsky, 2014 and 2017]

Since the events of 2014, the Hungarian minority has gained more political relevance: their parties advocate “for a better representation of ethnic Hungarians in the Ukrainian government, granting more rights to the minority and do not raise separatist talks” (⁴⁶⁴⁰). Additionally, they demand recognition of their dual citizenship and maintenance of their language rights. In September 2017 a controversial language law circumscribed minority language rights in general and it raised concerns among Hungarians. “The law, approved Sept. 5, restructures Ukraine’s education system and specifies that Ukrainian will be the main language used in schools” (⁴⁶⁴¹). Yet, the same coding as in the former period was applied.

⁴⁶⁴⁰ [Chelyadina, 2016]

⁴⁶⁴¹ [AP News, 2017]

The Romanians and Moldovans in Ukraine do not ask for independence or even regional autonomy. However, they want to preserve their culture and language. Hence, as in the Hungarian case, the language bill of September 2017 was criticized and caused the Romanian president to cancel his visit to Ukraine (⁴⁶⁴²). In sum, the aftermath of the events of 2014 created tensions with almost every ethnic group in Ukraine (⁴⁶⁴³).
